

Biographical Information for Gordon Monro

Gordon Monro is a member of the faculty of the School of Mathematics and Statistics, University of Sydney; his research interests include mathematical aspects of computer sound generation. He also teaches a course in computer music composition in the Music Department, University of Sydney.

Gordon first started composing in 1989, as a consequence of attending a music technology camp. Since then he has composed works for choir and solo voice, as well as computer-realised works, and has collaborated on several multi-media works. His works have been performed in several Australian cities, and in the U.S.A.